Global eProcure publishes a new white paper on sourcing professional services for companies looking to tackle new frontiers in today's recessionary economy

Global eProcure's new white paper "Sourcing with Pros" is a practical guide to finding out new ways to handle concerns about the sourcing of professional services.

March 06, 2009

The present global economical meltdown has affected organizations so badly that even the world's top companies are compelled to think about how to cut corners and reduce overhead. Global eProcure, which is a leading full service procurement solutions company, has realized the need of the hour and introduced this new white paper which is a complete guide on how to tackle the current bottlenecks in sourcing professional services.

"Companies today are looking for areas where they can squeeze out additional productivity and cost savings. One area that has traditionally been a challenge for procurement departments is professional services. This is due in part to long-term established relationships and in part to the aura companies have built up around their services. Our aim is to help procurement professionals with an easy reference guide", says Siddharth Hegde, Director of Marketing at Global eProcure.

The global recession has compelled procurement departments to work on their sourcing strategies once again to identify new sources of savings. With a focus on providing practical advice to the procurement professional, Global eProcure has compiled the latest, most effective trends in sourcing relationship-driven categories such as legal services, management consulting, and creative marketing. The white paper also includes "myth-busting" case studies from companies that have successfully sourced professional services categories
